Syn. Pflegen, Gewohnt ſeyn. We pflegen to do a thing, in so far as we repeat an action under similar circumstances; we are gewohnt to do a thing, when we do it willingly or because we conceive it to be good. Thus we pflegen to smoke, when we do so as often as we have the time and opportunity; but we are gewohnt to smoke, when we find a pleasure in it. Pflegen, therefore, is said of inanimate things also; gewohnt ſeyn, only of sentient and rational beings.

Syn. Pflicht, Obliegenheit, Schuldigkeit. Pflicht indicates every kind of moral necessity, whatever its object may be. A Pflicht becomes, however, a Schuldigkeit towards the person we are bound to perform it, and this an Obliegenheit, when that which we are bound to do has been undertaken by ourselves or imposed on us by another. There are Pflichten which no one can require from us; for we have not only Pflichten towards ourselves, but also towards God (which are left to our conscience) and even towards animals. Schuldigkeit and Obliegenheit can be required from us by those to whom we are indebted. There are, however, onerous Pflichten also, and these only can be called Obliegenheiten.

Syn. Platt, Flach, Niedrig. The Platte has no perceptible elevation, the Fläche no perceptible depression. The fläche hand or palm stands in opposition to the closed hand or fist, and the Oberfläche of a body is its extension in length and breadth without thickness. We call a witticism flach, when it does not go far into things, platt, when it is poor, common or vulgar. For we conceive the beautiful, the exquisite, &c., as something raised above what is common. In painting, however, platt and flach are used synonymously; they are often confounded also in common conversation. Platt and niedrig, differ, in so much as platt betrays a visible want of wit and sense, niedrig a want of nobleness of sentiments. Platte flattery is unrestrained and insipid; niedrige flattery discovers mean sentiments.

Syn. Plaz, Raum. Plaz implies a surface on which things may rest or move. When Raum is considered as synonymous with it, we understand leerer Raum, in each of the three dimensions. By Plaz is generally understood, however, only a part of Raum. The Plaz of a thing, therefore, is the part of an entire Raum, which everything takes upon it. Plaz is always limited; leerer Raum is conceived as unlimited. Plaz is a definite part of Raum.

Plüme, f. (pl. -n) provinc. plume, feather; compos. —ſchwanz, m. the Brazilian bird of Paradise.

Plümente, f. (pl. -n) American hoopoe.

Plümage, f. 1. plumage; 2. vid Federbuſch.

Plümp & Plümps, s. m. & int. plump! plumb! bounce.

Plümp, I. adj. blunt, coarse; heavy, awkward, unwieldy; II. adv. bluntly, coarsely, awkwardly.

Syn. I. Plump, Schwerfällig, Unbehülflich. Unbehülflich indicates awkwardness in motion, plump and ſchwerfällig its causes; the former implying the remote, the latter the proximate and immediate cause. The Plumpe has too great a mass and too rude a form. The galleons of the famous invincible fleet were plump engines and on that account extremely ſchwerfällig, so that they were too unbehülflich to escape the skilful manœuvering of the English ships.

Syn. II. Plump, Bäuriſch, Unhöflich, Grob, Täpiſch. The Zeipel displeases by the clumsey motions arising from awkwardness; the Bäuriſche displeases in his language, actions and manners from want of perception of what is becoming; but neither can be said to offend. The Plumpe and Grobe, however, fail in the respect which is due to others: the first merely from want of delicacy of feeling, the latter also from pride and contempt. The Plumpe, Grobe and Unhöflihe violate the respect due to others; the Unhöflihe merely omits what good breeding requires; the Grobe is really offensive both in language and actions.

Plümpe, f. vid. Pumpe.

Plümpen, v. n. (aux. ſeyn) 1. to plump, fall plump, move suddenly but clumsily; to enter in an abrupt and clumsy manner; mit etwas heraus —, to blunder out with a thing; 2 provinc. for Pumpen, to pump.

Syn. Prunk, Pracht, Gepränge, Pomp, Prahlerei. Pomp approaches nearest to Pracht. It is an augmentation of the idea of Pracht, and indicates Pracht suited only for the highest or most distinguished persons, and on the most solemn occasions. Gepränge approaches more nearly to Prunk. It signifies, in its origin, a frequent Prangen; it is not, however, always without internal worth; only when it is vain and empty it is Prunk. Still lower than Prunk is Prahlerei, for this seeks to excite attention and admiration by excellencies which it does not possess or, at least, not in the degree it pretends to.

Punktirung, f. punctuation.

Pünktlich, I. adj. punctual; zu —, punctilious; II. adv. punctually.

Syn. Pünktlich, Genau. Genau refers more to the thing in relation to which we act, pünktlich more to the time. We arrive pünktlich at a certain place by sea, when the charts are quite genau. A pünktlicher man is, properly, he who does everything at the appointed time. They are often, however, confounded; but never in such a way that he whom we call a genauen or ekeln man, can be considered also a pünktlicher man.

Syn. Putz, Schmuck, Zierde, Zierath, Verzierung. Putzen, Schmücken, Zieren. Putzen implies properly a lower degree of beautifying; Schmücken and zieren, a higher. Peasants putz their rooms, when they sweep and dust them. Schmuck embellishes a thing by splendour and costliness; Zierrathen by intrinsic beauty. Putzen, in general, therefore, means to embellish; schmücken, to embellish by splendour and costliness or on solemn festivals; zieren, to embellish by the addition of something in itself beautiful, but the beauty of which consists more in the exquisiteness of the form than in splendour or costliness. Zierde, Zierrath, Verzierung, imply that with which anything is geziert or embellished; with this difference, however, that Zierde is applied also figuratively (e. g. modesty is the greatest Zierde of youth) and the other two not; whilst Zierrathen are mere trifles with which we seek to embellish anything. It is not every Zierrath in a building which is also a Verzierung.

Quacksalber, m. (-s; pl. —) quack, mountebank.

Syn. Quacksalber, Marktschreier, Gaukler. The Marktschreier is distinguished from the Quacksalber by his setting up his booth in public places and loudly proclaiming the merits of his medicines; the Quacksalber only goes into houses to recommend his medicines, or sends about printed bills in which he boasts of his cures. Quacksalber indicates, therefore, one who gives himself out for a physician from his ignorance, Marktschreier from his boasting. Gaukler seems to indicate a Quacksalber in a still more contemptible light; as one who seeks to hide his ignorance, in a chattering and confused way, by technical terms from the learned languages.

Qual, f. (pl. -en) pain, torment, torture, pang, grief, affliction; in compos. —belastet, adj. * loaded with pain or torments; —erfüllt, adj. vid. —voll; —göttinn, f. Fury; —voll, adj. & adv. full of pain, torments or anguish.

Syn. Qual, Pein, Marter, Folter, Plage. Pein indicates the extent of pain as to its violence, Qual as to its duration. Pein implies, therefore, the generic idea of pain, Qual the various species of it. This is evident also from the fact that Qual has a plural, whereas Pein has not. Hence mere annoyances, which we strive to get rid of, can also quälen. The uncertainty whether what we design to do be right and good, often quält the best and most conscientious, but after a bad action the conscience of the bad man peinigt him. Children quälen an affectionate mother with their unreasonable requests. Folter and Marter are synonymous with Qual and Pein only in their figurative sense. Plage implies every kind of molestation. A nurse has much Plage with a sick child. Plage interrupts an agreeable state; Qual is an uninterruptedly painful one.

Quälen, v. a. to pain, grieve, afflict, torment, vex, teaze, importune, plague.

Rechtfertigung, f. vid. under compos. of Recht, s.

Syn. Rechtfertigung, Entschuldigung, Schutzrede, Vertheidigung, Verantwortung, Schutzschrift. When we try to prove that we have not done something bad of which we are accused, or that what we have done is not bad, we undertake our Rechtfertigung. When, however, we grant that we have done it, and that it is wrong, we can only adduce reasons to diminish our culpability, and these serve as our Entschuldigung. A Schutzrede can do both. Maternal tenderness entschuldigt a mother's indulgence for the rudeness of her children, but does not rechtfertigen it. When a Schutzrede contains merely an Entschuldigung, it is still distinguished from the latter by its presupposing an accusation, which Entschuldigung does not. A Vertheidigung may either take place with arms, where one is forcibly attacked, or it may be only verbal against reproaches or accusations. A Schutzschrift is a written Schutzrede. Verantwortung differs from Vertheidigung as relating only to an accusation of unjust actions, and secondly, that we can verantworten only our own actions, but we can vertheidigen those of another. Verantwortung is distinguished from Schutzrede in this, that by the latter we also vertheidigen another against an accusation, but by a Verantwortung only ourselves.

Rèden, v. a. & n. (aux. haben) to speak; to talk; to discourse; Deutſch, Engliſch —, to speak German, English; für einen —, einem das Wort —, to speak in one's behalf: er läßt nicht mit ſich —, he hears no reason: laßt die Leute —, never mind people's talk; man redet ſtark davon, it is much talked of; nach dem Munde —, to flatter (humour) one; in den Tag hinein —, to talk at random, to speak inconsiderately; in den Wind —, to speak in vain, to no purpose; öffentlich —, to harangue.

Syn. Reden, Sprechen, Sagen. Sprechen is merely to utter the sounds which the words in any language require; reden, to express by words its sense; ſagen relates to what is uttered, whether it be the mere sounds or the subject of discourse. Parrots and some other birds may be said to ſprechen: but it would be absurd to say that a parrot had carried a long time. Sagen is more immediately related with "to tell, to say plain;" as, tell me (ſagen Sie mir) where he lives (not reden Sie, or ſprechen Sie mir). It is, however, the same thing whether we say ſagen, reden, or ſprechen Sie mir nicht davon, do not speak to me about it.

Syn. Ruhe, Rast, Friede. Ruhe, in general, is that state in which we do not move; Rast, that in which a fatiguing motion ceases. Hence Rast is said only of living beings, for these only feel the fatigue of motion and the want of repose. Ruhe, on the contrary, is used of bodies whether inanimate or living. Rast, moreover, only succeeds to motion in order to continue it. Ruhe can precede all motion and continue for ever. We retire only after bodily motion; but there is also internal Ruhe: that of the soul and mind

Sammeln (fig), Versammeln (fig), Zusammen kommen. Sich versammeln implies to come together singly, accidentally or by degrees: hence it may be said equally of things or of persons and animals. Water sammelt sich in a pit; people sammeln sich in the market; where carr on a, vultures sammeln sich. Sich versammeln indicates, besides this, somewhat the sam of coming together, as, to deliberate on something, to celebrate a feast, &c. The citizens versammelten sich in the townhall, they sammelten sich on the meadow. Zusammen kommen is the more general term, and is distinguished from the others by being used also of two only, whereas the others can only be said of many.

Syn. Scharf, Scharfsichtig, Scharfsinnig, Fein, Durchdringend. A sharp mind discovers in objects, things, which from their inconsiderableness and fineness are difficult to be perceived; a scharfsichtiger perceives every thing easily; a durchdringender discovers even what lies deepest and most concealed. Feinheit of mind discovers the most delicate characteristics of things, which perhaps a more sharp and less delicate overlooks. Good interest makes us scharfsichtig, and the most ordinary minds become so when self interest is mainly concerned.

Sw. I. Schmerz, Weh, Pein. An Schmerz (pain) is antithetical to Vergnügen (pleasure), so in a like manner is Weh (ill or evil) the reverse of Wohl (good, welfare, &c.). Pein (agony or torture) is only a higher degree of Schmerz.

Sw. II. Schmerz, Traurigkeit, Betrübniß, Leid. As long as a disagreeable sensation is still novel, recent or acute, it is Schmerz (pain or suffering); as soon, however, as the first Schmerz has lost a portion of its violence, it leaves behind it a Traurigkeit (sadness, &c.) and Betrübniß (affliction, &c.) which are of a milder nature. Schmerz is, therefore, the condition of a more exquisite sensibility or sensation, than Traurigkeit and Betrübniß. Der Traurige as well as der Betrübte complains, but great Schmerz is passively silent. Leid is changrin, vexation or annoyance, and is that sorrow or grief felt under some misfortune occasioned by our fellow-creatures, more especially so, should it be coupled with injustice.

Syn. I. Schuld, Ursache. Schuld can only be employed for "cause," when the effect and motive are bad, but Ursache (cause) may be used indifferently, whether the effect and motive be good or bad.

Syn. II. Schuldlos, Unschuldig. Schuld may be considered in two points of view. It is guilt or a fault, when it conveys the impression of a neglect of moral duty, together with its imputation and harm; when it implies an injury committed or a wrong sustained. This last idea prevails in unschuldig (harmless), the first in schuldlos (guiltless, faultless); children are said to be unschuldig (innocent), because they are incapable of doing anything wicked; when certain pleasures, games, sports, &c are said to be unschuldig (innocent, innocuous), all that is meant to be conveyed is, that they are not detrimental; those are schuldlos (guiltless, innocent), which are not opposed to any moral law.

Syn. Schwäche, Schwachheit. In ethics these words, so closely similar to each other, are to be distinguished thus: Schwäche implies a certain weakness or imbecility of character or of the appetitive faculty, and Schwachheiten are the foibles resulting from these Schwächen. But as cause and effect are frequently confounded by a very common metonymy Schwachheiten (foibles) are often figuratively called Schwächen (weaknesses).

Syn. Schwanken, Wanken, Wedeln Taumeln. Schwanken (the intensive form of Wanken) denotes a more violent motion, by which a lofty body inclines nearer to the surface of the ground, and threatens to fall should it be very heavy; towers, for instance, schwanken (rock, reel, wave) from a violent earth-quake; wanken denotes a less violent motion, when incipient, and is "to waver;" wedeln expresses the movement of those things, which ought to stand firm, but which do not stand sufficiently so. Taumeln is to move backwards and forwards irregularly as a living being may do; out of wedeln arises the capability of moving from one side to another from a want of firmness. A table wedelt (is rickety or loose); the milk-teeth begin to wedeln (grow loose) as soon as nature intends them to be shed. A man taumelt (staggers or reels) when giddy, when drunk, when only half awake or stupified.

Syn. Schwere, Gewicht, Wucht. Schwer, Wichtig. Schwere and Gewicht are rendered manifest not only by motion, but also by pressure on the body, that opposes the central or centripetal force. Wucht is properly speaking evident alone by force or momentum. Bodies differing from each other as to Gewicht (weight or specific gravity) fall with equal velocity in a vacuum, and therefore are of the same absolute Schwere (absolute gravity). Hence it appears that Schwere is heaviness or gravity, Gewicht weight, and Wucht ponderousness, ponderance. In a figurative sense, that which is schwer (heavy), requires much force or power, and that which is wichtig (weighty) produces great effects, is effective. It is an schwere Frage (a difficult, grave question), what constitution or form of government may be the best, but it is wichtig (important, momentous) that the government be carried on as it ought to be.

Segnen, v. a. 1. to bless; to utter a benediction; 2. to make the sign of the cross: to cross; 3. to spell, enchant; 4. + to utter an imprecation, to curse.

Den Segnen, (Einen) einsegnen, (Einem) den Segen geben. Segnen (to bless) is principally distinguished from den Segen geben (to give the blessing or benediction) by this, that the former represents also the mere inward wish, whilst the latter expresses that wish by words or other signs. Thus the priest, at the close of divine service, gibt den Segen (gives the blessing) to his congregation; he gives also the nuptial benediction at the altar, &c. Einsegnen is to consecrate, also to devote by a blessing or by invoking the grace of God (e. g. children at confirmation).

Syn. Sehen, Ansehen, Gaffen, Angaffen, Gucken, Schielen, Blinzen. The act of directing the eyes to any object is expressed by ansehen (to look at); the ocular perception of that object by sehen (to see). He who wants to sehen (see) any thing property, must ansehen (look at) it, and he who ansieht any thing within the scope of his vision, supposing his sight to be perfect, will also sehen (see) it. Ansehen without attention is gaffen or angaffen, i. e. to gaze or stare stupidly, to gape at. The Gaffer (gaper, starer, gazer) has his eyes wide open without seeing distinctly, or without being exactly conscious of what he really is seeing. Angaffen differs from gaffen in implying a definite object, whilst the latter is to gape at any thing. Gucken expresses a part of the meaning of sehen, viz.: that part denoting the direction of the eyes to the object, but implies besides the inquisitive approximation of the head towards the same. It is hence "to peep, peer, look inquisitively." Schielen is to squint and blinzen is to blink accompanied with winking, i. e. "to blink and wink."

Selten, I. adj. rare, scarce; unfrequent, seldom; extraordinary; II. adv. seldom, rarely, scarcely, unfrequently.

Syn. Selten, Seltsam. Selten is an attribute of any thing that is seldom found or possessed; it implies something which always has a certain value derived from the very fact of its being uncommon, and very often it produces admiration, pride or delight: it is, therefore, equivalent to "rare, scarce;" on the other hand seltsam is an epithet, that conveys the idea of something not only uncommon, but likewise unusual, that differs from what our mind conceives to be true to the laws of nature, of sound reason, of universal custom, thereby exciting always surprise, very often risibility and perhaps contempt; hence it is appositely explained by strange, odd or by the familiar word queer; both words may sometimes be explained by singular or curious; if it makes us laugh or sneer, seltsam often answers to funny, droll.

Seltenheit, f. (pl. -en) rareness, rarity, scarcity; —en, rarities, curiosities.

Seltsam, I. adj. 1. strange, odd, irregular, wonderful; 2 + rare; II. adv. strangely, oddly; es sieht — aus, it affords a strange sight, it looks odd.

Syn. Seltsam, Unglaublich, Wunderlich, Wundersam, Wunderbar. All these words, with the exception of Unglaublich, have reference to the object or subject itself; unglaublich (incredible) expresses an opinion or judgment upon the possibility or reality of the said object, &c. Wunderlich (queer) refers merely to every action proceeding from our will or fancy, to every idea, &c. that is repugnant to stern reason or sober judgment; it is, therefore, either singular, eccentric or whimsical. A capricious or fanciful man is wunderlich (singular, odd, whimsical), his actions are wunderlich (surprising, extraordinary), his ideas are wunderlich (eccentric, strange, fantastic). Wundersam is wondrous, and wunderbar is wonderful. Seltsam is that which from being unusual or eccentric appears generally to be wrong or improper, it is, therefore, strange, odd, queer, singular, curious. Vid. also Selten.

Seúfzen, v. n. (anx. haben) & a. to sigh, groan; nach etwas —, to sigh for or after.

Syn. Seufzen, Aechzen, Stöhnen. Seufzen (sighing) is produced as well by a deep and long-drawn inspiration as by a strong expiration. Stöhnen and Aechzen are the strong expulsion of the breath attended with a painful sound. Seufzen is, moreover, the most subdued expression of a mental suffering. Aechzen shows the immediate presence of pang or throw, and Stöhnen reveals the exhausting exertion of enduring suffering. The strict censor ſeufzet (sighs) over the corruption of the times. A patient aechzt (groans, utters a groan) when racked by a pain. A man ready to sink under a burden, one mortally wounded, ſtöhnt. It seems, therefore, that aechzen is to groan acutely, and ſtöhnen to utter low, moaning or deep groans, to groan heavily or gaspingly.

Sipp or Sippe, m. (pl. -en) + kinsman; relative.

Sippen, v. n. (i. u.) to be related, of the same kindred.

Sippe, } f. (pl. -en) 1. kin, con-
Sippſchaft, } sanguinity, kindred; 2. kinsmen, relatives, relations; compos. —ſtaum, m. vid. Stammbaum; —s-grad, m. degree of relationship; —s-theil, m. the hereditary portion.

Syn. Sippſchaft, Verwandtſchaft, Freundſchaft. All those belong to the Sippſchaft, who are connected or related to each other by blood in an ascending or descending line, as parents and children, their ancestors and posterity; they form, therefore, the genealogical tree. Verwandt differs from vermandt inasmuch as the former merely represents such persons as are connections by marriage, whilst Verwandte can also mean relatives or relations by birth. Hence the first is consanguinity, the second relationship, and the third affinity.

Syn. Spalten, Trennen. In the first place, one spaltet (cleaves, splits, rends asunder) only solid and tough or stiff bodies; one trennt (separates or parts) fluids, and amongst the solids also such as are pliant. The seas on our globe are getrennt (separated) by the mainland, but not gespaltet; a great and continued heat on the other hand often spaltet (cracks or chaps) the ground. Then again, one spaltet (splits) that which was intimately connected and bound together; one trennt (separates) that, which, without being intimately connected, was considered as one whole, the parts of which, after the separation, begin to exist as independent wholes.

Spalter, m. (-s; pl. —) wood-cleaver.

Spaltung, f. (pl. -en) fig. disunion, division, rupture; schism.

Syn. Spaltung, Trennung, Zerwürfniß. Disagreements among the members of a society are only mere Spaltungen, (splits, divisions, differences, disunion, schism), so long as these members do not secede and set up a separate society of their own; the moment the latter takes place, a complete Trennung (separation) follows. Even among the very early Christians there were several Spaltungen (differences), but those Spaltungen were no Trennungen, since they still formed one congregation, one church as before, and did not give rise to a sect. When the Spaltung (breach of concord or unanimity) is accompanied with ill will and hostile demonstrations, so as to lead to a breach of the previous good order, it is then a Zerwürfniß (an open rupture).

Syn. Sprengen, Spritzen, Streuen. Streuen (to strew) is used for dry substances, ſpritzen (to spurt, &c.) for fluids, and ſprengen (to sprinkle, scatter) for both. One ſtreuet (strews) sand over the floor, over ink not dry, flowers on the way. When ſprengen is used for dry substances, it differs in this from ſtreuen, that it is thrown in an inconsiderable measure over a surface; if meant is wished to be kept sweet for a few days, one ſprengt ſalt, &c. over it, which may be effected either by pinches or by sinaking a little from the point of a knife, &c. Sprengen differs from ſpritzen through the violence or impulse with which the fluid body is impelled by the Spritzen.

then a repetition of words or syllables accompanied by a painful feeling of exertion on the part of the person so speaking. It arises either from a natural defect or from an unfortunate habit. It is, therefore, identical with our "to stutter." Stammeln and Lallen merely imply an imperfect utterance without the accompanying defects of flotters. The children lallen or stammeln, when their tongue, as yet imperfectly trained, utters words only partially or incorrectly; stammeln is, therefore, almost the same as our "to stammer." Lallen is the stronger word of the two, expressing the higher degee. Hence it is sometimes equivalent to our "to matter;" in choice or poetica. language it may be rendered by "to lisp."

Steuern, v. a. & n. (aux. haben) 1. to steer, pilot; 2. to pay taxes, to contribute; 3. (with dat.) to check, put a stop to; prevent, hinder, restrain; 4. provinc. to prop; help, aid, support: auf etwas —, to be intent upon; sich auf etwas —, vulg. to lean upon, rest upon; zu etwas —, to contribute to.

Syn. Steuern, Wehren (einer Sache). The former originally equivalent to Züchtigen, includes more to the right of setting certain limits to a thing or person, the latter more to the means adopted for checking an evil. God steuert den Sünder (the sinner), i. e. causes or endeavours him to turn aside, restrains him from the path of sin; we must wehren (check, put a stop to) the idleness of a child, vid. Verwehren. Hence the former seems to be "to restrain, to repress" and the latter "to guard against, to ward off."

Syn. I. Stock, Stab, Stecken. The two former correspond to the English "stick, staff." vid. Hirtenstab, Zauberstab, Bettelstab u. s. w. Hence Stab is the more elegant word of the two and in poetry is often rendered by "wand." Stecken is a small or thin Stock, and is also a lower expression, Stock being the usual term for a walking-stick: Stecken is therefore the English "rod or switch."

Syn. II. Stock, Staude, Strauch, Busch. The Staude, the Strauch and the Busch are woody or ligneous, and sent forth several stems from one common root; the Strauch, however, differs from Staude in this, that its numerous little stems are so twisted and distorted, that they appear entangled, and the eye is baffled, when attempting to trace them out individually. Strauch is, therefore, the frutex or real shrub, while Staude is more the shrub or low dwarf-tree. A wide-spreading Strauch, when it consists of numerous little stems, all of them proceeding from one root, growing in a jungle or maze and having a great quantity of leaves, is called a Busch (bush). A Stock is one single stem, e. g. Rosenstock, Nelkenstock, Erdbeerstock.

stig, adj. diatonic; —nweise, adv. by steps; by degrees, gradually.

Syn. Stufe, Staffel, Grad. Stufe and Staffel (originally identical) always allude to height or depth; one says the Staffeln or Stufen before a house, in a cellar, &c. Grad means a definite quantity of any thing in scientific language. Thus the parts of a circle are termed Grade, and a circle is divided into Grade (degrees) and not into Stufen (steps). A thermometer, a gauge, &c. are similarly divided by Grade.

Syn. Tadel, Miſſallen, Mißbilligung. Miſſallen (dislike or displeasure) is the reverse of Gefallen, and consists, in the first place, of a mere feeling for which we often can neither account to ourselves nor assign the reason to others; that which we tadels (blame or censure) and mißbilligen (disapprove), implies faults of which we are clearly conscious and which we can show or, at all events, think we can. Miſſallen can be limited to the mere feeling and be kept confined in one's own mind, but when a person tadelt and mißbilligt, he lets his opinion be known either with intelligible signs or more generally with words. Lastly, irrational and even inanimate things and their effects may also mißfallen (displease) us, but we tadeln and mißbilligen only for actions and their effects.

Syn. Theil, Stück, Antheil. A Theil is a constituent "part" of a whole and similar to it; a Stück (piece) is one single thing belonging to a certain higher thing. Antheil is that part or piece of any thing, over which somebody possesses a right or on which a right is granted him (portion, share).

Theilbar, adj. partible, divisible.

Theilbarkeit, f. divisibility, divisibleness.

Theilen, v. I. a. to divide, part, share; II. refl. 1. to split, to separate; 2. to divide itself, be divided; 3 recipr. to share one with another (ſich in etwas —).

Syn. Theilen, Eintheilen, Abtheilen, Zertheilen. Theilen is generally to separate a whole into parts. Eintheilen (to impose, &c.) denotes that one separates the greater whole into smaller parts of a definite regular number, or a thing of higher rank into parts of inferior rank. This may be done by the mind merely: if this separation is also made evident to the senses by outward signs, it then becomes abtheilen (to part off, to divide, &c.). Zertheilen (to part asunder, to disconnect, dissever) is separating the constituent parts of a whole in such a manner, that they exist as independent wholes for themselves.

Syn. Thier, Vieh. The term Vieh is limited to domestic animals. It is, however, far more comprehensive than the English "cattle," which merely implies oxen and horses; vid. Federvieh, Zugvieh, Mastvieh, Schlachtvieh, Zimmervieh s. f. m. The ant is considered an industrious Thier and the bee a prudent Thier. Hence the term "animal" is not the full equivalent for Thier; for although all living things are animals in contradistinction to vegetables, &c., the word cannot be used in common life for an insect, a bird, or a fish, &c., but these words must be substituted for the German Thier as the context may require.

Thierchen, n. (–s; pl. —) animalcule.

Thierheit, f animal nature, animal character; brutishness.

Thierisch, I. adj. animal; brutish, beastly, bestial; die —e Wärme, animal heat; II. adv. brutishly, bestially.

Syn. Thierisch, Viehisch, Brutal. Thierisch in man is every thing that he has in common with other animals. This is not opposed to the prerogatives of his reasoning nature, and does not exclude them. That which is opposed to them, is viehisch. Every gratification of sensuality has something thierisch (of the animal) in it, but that indulgence which by its violation of nature's laws or by its extreme excess degrades man from the rank obtained by his reason, that is viehisch (brutal, bestial). Brutal is an epithet of the coarsest sensuality.

Syn. Thräne, Zähre. Thräne denotes every trickling drop; Zähre only that one, which flows from the source of pain. Zähre has therefore invariably a moral sense, Thräne may have likewise a purely physical one. Moreover Zähre flows only from motives of benevolence. Thräne is also the expression of pain at pain felt by one's self. "Tear" is the only word in English.

Thränen, v. n. (aux. haben) to run with tears; to weep; der Weinstock thränt, the vine drops, bleeds.

Syn. Thränen, Weinen. Thränen is, in the first place, used only in speaking of the eye, from which drops flow. Weinen is also used of the person, who sheds the tears. Hence Weinen is an effect and expression of mental pain, whilst the Thränen of the eyes may proceed from any cause whatever, e. g. from smoke, cold, a cold &c. Hence Thränen may be given by "to cry," Weinen by "to weep."

Tilgen, v. a. 1 to blot out; 2. to eradicate, efface, extinguish; 3. to pay, annul; eine Schuld —, to pay, discharge, sink a debt.

Syn. Tilgen, Vertilgen, Zerstören, Ausrotten, Vernichten n. Ausrotten corresponds exactly to the English, to root out, extirpate, eradicate, and Vernichten is "to annihilate." We tilgen something that is disagreeable, disadvantageous, &c. to us, e. g. weeds, vermin, debts; and do so by extirpating (ausrotten) the first, and figuratively speaking, the second, the last by paying it. The English for this is "to get rid of." Vertilgen always implies violent measures; it is "to exterminate." Hence we may say, Vertilgen weeds, vermin, but not debts. A person zerstört merely those things, which are composed of component parts, by disturbing their state of rest, by strewing them asunder, &c. Time zerstört everything, but it does not vernichten. The use of the latter, unless it is applied to God, is always figurative or hyperbolical.

Umzingeln, v. a. (inſepar.) to encircle, surround on all sides; eine Feſtung —, to encompass or beleager a fortress; Diebe —, to close round robbers.

Syn. Umzingeln, Umgeben, Umringen. A person is umgeben (surrounded) by many others, even if the circle is not yet completely closed. When the king appears at the court, he is umgeben by the court-dignitaries, but not umringt (encircled), still less umzingelt; for they only stand behind him and on both sides. Moreover umgeben is said also of a circle, that consists of inanimate things. The sun and the moon are sometimes umgeben by a bright circle, which is called a halo. But that which is umringt, is shut in on all sides and into a perfect circle. We therefore umringen something, that it may have no egress, and no one an ingress to the same. Umzingeln is to close something in more narrowly, to obstruct the egress and to be able to attack it from a short distance. Umringen, therefore, may either have a friendly or a hostile object in view, but umzingeln (to environ, encompass) only a hostile one.

Unbeständig, I. adj. inconstant, changeable, unstable, unsteady, fickle, variable, mutable; II. adv. inconstantly, unsteadily, fickly, changeably, mutably.

Syn. Unbeständig, Veränderlich, Wankelmüthig. Veränderlich (mutable, changeable) is an epithet for a person or thing that often and easily changes, or for anything in general which can be changed. Fashion is veränderlich, a man is veränderlich, &c. The proportion between the sides of a triangle is called veränderlich and not unbeständig. The former, therefore, points more to the susceptibility of undergoing change and is not always a fault. Unbeständig implies more a defect of constancy in the state or relation once entered into, and is always a fault, e. g. ein unbeständiger (inconstant) Mann; unbeständiges (fickle) Wetter. Wankelmüthig (irresolute) can naturally be only used of persons. A man is wankelmüthig, when he often changes his thoughts, his choice, his resolves before the execution of them takes place; he is unbeständig and veränderlich, when he often changes his will or plans after having commenced the execution of them. The Wankelmüthige cannot direct his choice to any object with firmness. The Unbeständige and Veränderliche does not long remain constant to the choice he has already made; the former cannot make a beginning, the latter cannot persevere.

Ungeritten, adj. that has or have not yet been ridden.

Ungern, adv. unwillingly, with reluctancy, reluctantly, with displeasure, against the grain; ich sehe —, I am sorry to find.

Syn. Ungern, Ungern, Unfreiwillig. When a man compels himself to do any thing that is disagreeable to another, he does it ungern and unwillig; he simply does that unfreiwillig, to which he has been compelled by others. We often do something freiwillig (spontaneously, voluntarily), that we nevertheless do ungern (not readily) and unwillig (unwillingly). Unwillig is distinguished from ungern by this, that we do ungern what is excessively disagreeable to us, but unwillig, what we detest, and with such a degree of annoyance or repugnance, as to betray it by our behaviour. When any one does any thing ungern (not cheerfully), it is disagreeable to him, even if he does not allow it to be perceived; when he does any thing unwillig (reluctantly, with repugnance), other persons can perceive it by his looks, gestures and words.

Syn. I. Ungewiß, Zweifelhaft, Unentschieden, Verlegen. We are ungewiß (uncertain) when we do not know, whether something ought to be desired and whether it be good or essentially necessary to desire that something. We are zweifelhaft (doubtful, dubious) when we do not know which of two things we ought to desire, seeing that we have reasons equally cogent and potent for either side. Unentschiedenheit (irresolution) is the difficulty itself of deciding upon something, as long as we are still undecided for want of a preponderance of reasons, and thus becomes Verlegenheit (embarassement), when we positively must decide upon something, and yet cannot make up our minds to adopt one thing or the other. Ungewißheit (uncertainty) makes us indifferent, Zweifelhaftigkeit (doubt) uneasy, Unentschlossenheit inactive, Verlegenheit, distressed, anxious and fearful. In its highest degree Verlegenheit becomes a dilemma causing great mental distress.

Syn. II. Ungewiß, Zweifelhaft (as applied to things). A proposition, whether in itself considered it be true or false, is ungewiß, as long as the mind does not fully comprehend all the reasons, that tend to demonstrate its truth, or as long as there are not yet sufficient reasons for regarding it as false. It is zweifelhaft (doubtful) when the reasons for and against it are equally balanced.
